Investment commentary

Equity markets suffered for most of the month, before a seven-week losing streak was finally broken in the last week of May. The negative impact of inflation and higher interest rates on economic growth continued to weigh on valuations as corporate earnings are expected to slow. Prior to May, equity and bond returns were positively correlated with both asset classes experiencing capital losses. Correlation has now become negative reducing portfolio volatility. The correlation appears to be dependent upon the level of inflation, which in turn might depend upon central banks' willingness to stomach economic weakness and possibly higher unemployment. The short-term outlook for corporate margins and earnings is unclear and therefore more evidence of resilience will be required before adopting a less cautious stance, especially with geopolitical concerns rumbling in the background.

Fund Manager commentary

During May, our portfolio underperformed the benchmark index. Equity, Property and Alternative assets sold off over the period, which detracted from performance. Our Fixed Interest exposure performed better albeit not enough to offset weakness elsewhere. Within Equity, our position in Baillie Gifford American continued to weigh on performance as sentiment against high growth stocks continued. Our funds that have a clearly defined growth tilt were the weakest in the period. Our more value-orientated positions offered outperformance, however not enough to counteract the underperformance in the portfolio. The holding in Schroder Global Cities underperformed on the back of one of its largest positions (Prologis) selling off aggressively and JPM Global Macro fund underperformed due to its exposure towards equity-beta.
